Lacking research intelligence for your projects, policies and strategic thinking?

SURGE's holistic approach to consultancy uniquely combines economic and social regeneration expertise with academically rigorous and practitioner-focused research.

A key feature of our work is that it has a direct impact and makes a difference by informing regeneration policy and practice; whether through commissioned research by government and non-governmental departments and agencies, or through the provision of professional development training.

Our work is also very much people-focused; either indirectly through them being beneficiaries of our services, or directly through them shaping, participating and engaging in our research, consultancy and training activities. Moreover, we routinely share our findings with those who have contributed to our research projects, and we place a particular emphasis on publicising and applying the results of our work.

To find out more about how we can help inform your strategic thinking, visit our website or get in touch with one of our team.
