

New university hub for Stratford

In autumn 2013 a new university building will open in the centre of Stratford, a joint collaboration between Birkbeck, University of London, and the University of East London, two complementary and well established higher education institutions. This new education hub will encourage access and progression into higher education for people living and working in east London, supporting its economic regeneration.

The building, designed for flexible occupancy, will provide facilities for full-and part-time, day and evening study opportunities. Making the new university centre available to local community, business and arts groups, as well as other partners, supports the ongoing development of the area beyond the 2012 Olympics.

www.bbk.ac.uk/stratford

