Introducing the Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park

The 2012 Games is accelerating the regeneration of east London by decades and the future Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park is at the centre of this area of growth and investment.

The Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park will bring together the best of London, all in one place. At its core will be the creation of family-focused neighbourhoods; making the Park a top visitor destination, developed around sport, active recreation and the creation of commercial and job opportunities.

Homes inspired by the best of London's heritage
Over the next 25 years, five neighbourhoods, with much-needed family homes will develop. These new communities will include up to 11,000 new homes, based around a network of schools, nurseries, health, faith and community facilities.

London's new global attraction
The Park will have two very distinct characters – a vibrant and buzzing urban entertainment plaza in the south, anchored by the Stadium, Aquatics Centre and ArcelorMittal Orbit; sitting next to Europe's largest urban shopping centre, Westfield Stratford City, and Stratford station with its nine train and tube lines.

This area will capture the imagination of domestic and international visitors with its varied programme of cultural, sporting and community events and attractions.

Open space and vibrant waterways
The north of the Park will be centred on a river valley, waterways, parkland and green space, offering outdoor activities including play areas, cycle paths and access to the road circuits and off-road trails of the Lee Valley Velopark.

Communities that work and grow
The Park will also offer business and job opportunities, providing thousands of new jobs, potentially in the 90,000m² campus style business hub in and around the Press and Broadcast Centres in the north west of the Park.

The Olympic Park Legacy Company is responsible for delivering this new exciting piece of city and is leading the planning, development and management of the Park over the next 25 years.
